Farmers are much down in the mouth because their tobacco is firing.

The musical concert at Salem by the Boggs blind boys did not succeed financially well for the blind. These boys got all the proceeds here at the concert a few weeks since, and no questions asked about expense or paying some one's debts.

BOSTWICK'S DEATH.

He Did Not Die of Heart Disease as Was Generally Supposed.

A different account of the death of millionaire Jabez A. Bostwick, who at one time was in charge of the Standard Oil Company's business in Kentucky, is given by The New York World. It says Jabez A. Bostwick, one of the original members of the Standard Oil Trust and well-known financier and railroad man, died suddenly during a fire at his country home in Mammoth on last Tuesday night. At first his death was attributed to heart trouble brought on by excitement. It is now, however, admitted that Mr. Bostwick's death was the result of an internal hemorrhage caused by being jammed between the side of his stable and a coach.

When the fire broke out, Mr. Bostwick, in his residence not more than 100 feet distant, was preparing to retire. A servant told him of the fire. Mr. Bostwick, robbing himself, ran to the barn. He found Coachman William Bickford, Harry Bickford, his son, and Patrick Kelly, the groom, all of whom had quarters in the carriage house, saving the carriages. Frederick Powers and Patrick Connelly, neighbors, had let out the six horses in safety.

As the cottage of Mr. Constable's gardener caught fire, Mr. Bostwick told the firemen to try to save it, while he helped to bring out his property. Unknown to Coachman Bickford, Mr. Bostwick seized the whiffletrees of a carriage. Bickford was pushing at the rear. Suddenly the vehicle, which had been run out of the building, swerved, and Mr. Bostwick was violently jammed against the side of the stable. Instantly Bickford saw the aged man's peril and paused. The carriage rolled backward and Mr. Bostwick reeled forward. His face was white with pain.

Horace L. Hotchkiss and Clement Gould came to Mr. Bostwick's aid. They were his neighbors and half an hour before they had been playing billiards together. With their aid Mr. Bostwick was half led, half carried to the house. On the kitchen piazza he fell gasping to the floor, his face distorted with agony. He was lifted to a lounge. There he became unconscious. Within ten minutes the millionaire died, while the flames were crackling and the firemen were fighting the fire. His life had been literally crushed out.

ANNUAL REPORT

Of the President of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company.

The annual report for the year ending June 30th, 1892, of M. E. Ingalls, President of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, presents some remarkable statistics. The Company was re-organized in the fall of 1888, year previous to which it earned $1,500,000; last year it earned over $9,000,000. Not only was there an increase in passenger earnings, but also in the rate per mile, while freight traffic increased with very nearly the same rate per mile. To meet the demand of the heavy export traffic, new freight and passenger piers and increased yards have been completed at Newport News. Forty miles of double track over the mountains now nearing completion will be increased to seventy miles during the next year. New branch lines to valuable coal fields completed within the past year and others very nearly completed, will give increased traffic of that class. The main line is laid with 75 pound steel, stone ballasted, and together with the rolling stock greatly augmented during the past year, is in the finest condition. With all these increased facilities the cost of hauling traffic will be greatly reduced. For the first time in its history the Chesapeake and Ohio seems to have reached a dividend producing period. By the conversion of preferred stocks into 4 percent gold bearing bonds, a scheme which was approved by the stockholders with great unanimity. There is a fixed income from these holdings, while the scheme common stock is placed nearer a dividend.
